

Of Mice and Men

BACKGROUND INFO

AUTHOR BIO

Full Name: John Steinbeck

Date of Birth: 1902

Place of Birth: Salinas, California

Date of Death: 1968

Brief Life Story: John Steinbeck grew up in and around Salinas, California. Steinbeck's comfortable California upbringing instilled in him a love of nature and the land, but also of the diverse ethnic and socioeconomic groups featured throughout his fiction. He attended Stanford University, but never completed his degree. Instead he moved to New York in 1925 to become a freelance writer. He returned to California after that plan failed and earned his first real recognition for Tortilla Flat (1935), a collection of stories about peasant workers in Monterrey, California. He published many more novels throughout his lifetime and today is best known for the novella Of Mice and Men (1937) and the novel The Grapes of Wrath (1939). He won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1962 and died six years later.

KEY FACTS

Full Title: Of Mice and Men

Genre: Novella (short novel)

Setting: Salinas and Soledad, California during the Great Depression in the early 1930s

Climax: Lennie accidentally kills Curley's wife

Protagonist: Lennie Small and George Milton

Antagonists: Curley

Point of View: Third person omniscient

HISTORICAL AND LITERARY CONTEXT

When Published: 1937

Literary Period: Modernist Novel

Related Literary Works: John Steinbeck and Woody Guthrie were perhaps the two most famous chroniclers of the Great Depression. Steinbeck's trilogy of novels portraying the struggle of migrant workers in California is the most enduring literary chronicle of the Great Depression: In Dubious Battle (1936), Of Mice and Men (1937), and The Grapes of Wrath (1940). Woody Guthrie (1912–1967), the leading American songwriter of the late 1930s and 1940s, released the Dust Bowl Ballads in 1940, an album of songs inspired by the drought-ravaged region of the American West that came to be known as the "Dust Bowl" in the early 1930s.

Related Historical Events: When the stock market crashed in 1929, an already awful situation for farmers and farm workers got considerably worse. Following World War I, crop prices plunged, forcing farmers to expand their farms and buy more equipment to make up for the shortfall. This situation was exacerbated when a severe drought crippled much of the American West. So when the market crashed, farmers could not pay back the debts they had built up in buying more land and equipment. As a result, many farmers and farm workers, migrated to California in hopes of finding enough work to live.

ranch, George often whines that his life would be so much easier without Lennie. But when Lennie offers to leave him, George refuses. They bed down for the night, and George describes the farm that he and Lennie one day dream of owning together. George also reminds Lennie of the trouble Lennie got into at their last ranch and tells Lennie that if he gets into trouble again, he should hide at this spot where they're sleeping.

George and Lennie arrive at the ranch the next morning. There they meet Candy, an old handyman with only one hand, and the boss, who questions George and Lennie about their skills. The boss is skeptical when George answers for Lennie, but gives them work despite his suspicions. The men also meet Curley, the boss's ill-tempered and violent son, and, later, Curley's sexy wife, who likes to flirt with the ranch hands. Finally, George and Lennie meet Slim and Carlson. Slim's dog has just given birth, and Carlson wants to replace Candy's old, useless dog with one of the puppies.

After their first day of work, Slim gives a puppy to an overjoyed Lennie, and George tells Slim about what happened to him and Lennie at the ranch in Weed: Lennie touched a woman's dress and the woman accused him of rape. Slim voices his appreciation of the deep and selfless friendship between George and Lennie. Carlson, meanwhile, convinces Candy to let him shoot his dog. Carlson takes the dog outside and shoots it in the back of the head to make sure it doesn't suffer, but Candy still seems upset. When Lennie once again asks George to describe the farm they'll someday own, Candy overhears and asks if he can help them buy it. A few minutes later, Curley enters and the other men tease him about his wife. Curley mistakenly thinks Lennie is also laughing at him, so he punches Lennie. Lennie doesn't fight back until George says it's all right. Then Lennie catches Curley's hand and breaks it.

All of the men except Crooks, Lennie, and Candy go to visit a brothel on Saturday night. Though at first Crooks, a black man, refuses to talk to the white men, after a while they all end up talking about Lennie and George's farm. Crooks claims it will never work out. The conversation ends when Curley's wife enters. She mocks the men as weak and says she's so lonely that she's stooped to talking to them. When they tell her to leave, she threatens to have Crooks lynched.

The next afternoon, Lennie sits alone, consoling himself after accidentally killing his puppy. Curley's wife, lonely and desperate, sits beside him. She tells him of her failed dream of being an actress and offers to let Lennie touch her hair. But Lennie strokes it too hard. She tries to push him away. Lennie panics and shakes her, breaking her neck. Lennie flees to the spot by the river.

Candy discovers Curley's wife's body and alerts George. Curley leads a group of men to lynch Lennie, but George directs the men to the wrong place and finds Lennie first. As he once more describes the farm they're going to own and Lennie loses himself in imagination, George shoots Lennie in the back of the head with Carlson's gun. The men come running. George says he killed Lennie in a struggle for Carlson's gun. Slim tells George he did what he had to do.

CHARACTERS

George Milton – George is Lennie's friend and protector. Unlike the giant, lumbering Lennie, George is small and wiry with a quick and resourceful mind. In many ways, George is a typical migrant farm worker, a class of poor and lonely men who traveled from ranch to ranch looking for work during the Great Depression. But George differs from these often bitter men because of his friendship with Lennie, which keeps him, in his own words, from getting "mean." Though George sometimes resents Lennie as a burden, he also deeply loves him, and shares with him a dream of owning their own farm.

Lennie Small – George's companion. Lennie is huge and immensely strong, but a mental disability makes him entirely dependent on George, especially after his Aunt Clara dies (before the novella begins). Lennie is the most innocent, gentle, and kind character in the novel, and his sole dream is to tend rabbits

PLOT SUMMARY

Near the Salinas River in California, George Milton and Lennie Small, two migrant farm workers, walk toward a ranch. George is quick and smart, while Lennie is huge, strong, and mentally disabled. As they make their way to the and live off the "fatta the lan" on a farm that he and George will own. In the end, Lennie and his innocent dream fall prey to Curley's revenge and George's mercy, two powerful adult emotions beyond Lennie's control or comprehension.

Candy – An old handyman who greets George and Lennie at the ranch. The owner of an old and feeble dog, Candy is himself crippled—he lost his hand in an accident on the ranch. Candy is a man who has been broken by life in general and the Depression in particular, and he is desperate for some hope or dream to believe in. He therefore latches onto George and Lennie's plan to buy a farm, and offers his life savings to help them.

Curley – The son of the boss of the ranch, Curley is careful to make it clear that he is of a higher class than the other ranch hands by wearing fancy boots. He is also mean-spirited, violent, and insecure. Though the only married man on the ranch, he's extremely jealous and suspicious of his wife, and he tends to overcompensate for his lack of height by picking fights with larger men. Curley cares most about looking strong.

Curley's Wife – The only female character in the novel, and Curley's wife. The men on the ranch call her a "tart" because she flirts with them. They consider her dangerous because her attention might cause them to get fired, or worse. But beneath her sexy exterior, Curley's wife is deeply lonely, and has dashed dreams of her own.

Slim – A skilled mule driver with an ageless face, a grave manner, and a calm authority on how to run a ranch, Slim is a revered figure on the ranch. As the most self-assured of the men, he is the only one who never takes a swipe at anyone else in order to make himself feel stronger or better. At the same time, he is also the only one of the ranch hands who truly understands and appreciates the power and purity of the friendship between George and Lennie.

Crooks – The stable manager, and the only black man on the farm. Crook's name comes from his crooked posture, the result of a kick from a horse. Crooks is bitter from a lifetime of lonely segregation. He thinks of himself as a cynic, and immediately sees that George and Lennie's dream of owning a farm will never come about. Yet at the same time, he can't entirely resist the beauty of the dream, and wants to be a part of it.

Carlson – The ranch-hand who shoots Candy's dog in the back of the head. Though he isn't cruel, Carlson is without sentimentality, and has no qualms about killing or getting rid of anything that's no longer useful.

The Boss – The man who runs the ranch, and Curley's father. He is quick to anger and suspicion, but is otherwise fair. Like his son, the boss wears fancy boots to show that he occupies a station above the ranch hands.

Aunt Clara – Though not an actual character in the novel, Aunt Clara cared for Lennie until her death. She appears to Lennie in a vision near the end of the novel.

Whit – A ranch hand.

Andy Cushman – A childhood friend of George and Lennie's who is in prison "on account of a tart."

during which the novel was written and set, coming to terms with dreams broken by out-of-control economic forces became a reality nearly everyone in America faced.

THE AMERICAN DREAM

The American Dream is written into the Declaration of Independence: "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Lennie and George's dream of owning a farm and living off the "fatta the lan" symbolizes this dream. Of Mice and Men shows that for poor migrant workers during the Depression, the American Dream became an illusion and a trap. All the ranch hands in Of Mice and Men dream of life, liberty, and happiness, but none ever gets it. As Crooks says when he hears of Lennie's dream to own his own farm, "Nobody ever gets to heaven, and nobody gets no land."

At the same time, while the dream may never be realized, Of Mice and Men suggests that in order for life to be full and meaningful, it must contain dreams. George and Lennie never achieve their dream, but the dream holds their remarkable friendship together. Their dream is real because it's real in their imaginations. The dream keeps Lennie happy and stops George from becoming "mean" and lonely like most ranch hands. The dream gives them life, even if life never allows them to achieve their dreams.

MALE FRIENDSHIP

Of Mice and Men explores the dynamics of male friendship. When Lennie asks George to tell him why they're not like other ranchers, George explains that they're different because they have each other. Usually ranchers have no family, no friends, and, therefore, no future. George and Lennie's friendship strikes the other ranch workers as odd: their dependence on each other makes the boss and Curley suspicious; and Slim observes that ranch workers rarely travel together because they're scared of each other. Although most of the men in the novel are entirely alone, they all crave true companionship. As Crooks, perhaps the novel's most solitary character because of his black skin, puts it, "A guy needs somebody—to be near him."

THE WEAK AND THE STRONG

Though many characters in Of Mice and Men long for friendship and compassion, they live in fear of each other. As Carlson's unsentimental shooting of Candy's dog makes clear, in the Great Depression the useless, old, or weak were inevitably destroyed as the strong and useful fought for survival. Everyone on the ranch constantly tries to look strong, especially if they feel weak. The fear of the weak being overrun by the strong explains why Curley likes to fight larger men, why Crooks tells Lennie that George is going to abandon him, and why Curley's wife threatens to have Crooks lynched. Each character tries to appear strong by asserting power over another. The fear of the strong also explains why most of the other characters in Of Mice and Men can't comprehend Lennie and George's friendship. A human relationship devoid of power dynamics simply makes no sense to the other characters, all of whom assume they're in a fight for survival.

WOMEN

There are two different visions of women in Of Mice and Men: the male characters' view of women, and the novel's view of women. The men tend to view women with scorn and fear, dismissing women as dangerous sexual temptresses. Women are often referred to as "tarts," a derogatory word for women that means "tramp." Lennie and George have a mutual friend in prison "on account of a tart," and their own troubles result twice from the enticing allure of a woman—the woman in Weed, and Curley's wife. Yet although Curley's wife plays into her role as sexy temptress, Of Mice and Men presents her, at least partly, as a victim. She craves the attention of the men because she's desperately lonely, and flaunts her power over the men because she herself feels weak. Similarly, the novella's portrayal of Aunt Clara as a vision of wholesome femininity from a more innocent age contrasts with the male characters' consistently negative view of women.

THEMES

BROKEN PLANS

Of Mice and Men takes its title from a famous lyric by the Scottish poet Robert Burns (1759 - 1796). Burns's poem "To a Mouse" contains the lines, "The best laid plans of mice and men / Often go awry." Nearly all of the main characters Of Mice and Men harbor dreams and plans that never come true. Most notably, George, Lennie, and Candy share a doomed dream of buying their own farm and living off the land. George often laments the life he could have had as a freewheeling bachelor, free of the burden of caring for Lennie. "[I]f I was alone I could live so easy," he says. Lennie has his own private dream of living in a cave with his own rabbits, while Curley's wife often regrets her missed chance to become a Hollywood actress. In the end, the novel's main theme is that people must learn to reconcile their dreams with reality, to accept that everyone's best laid plans often perish. These plans "go awry" not because the characters in the novella give up on them, but because forces beyond their control destroy them. In the bleak economic outlook of the Great Depression,

SYMBOLS

GEORGE AND LENNIE'S FARM

The farm George and Lennie hope to own is a symbol of the American Dream. Like a mirage, the farm leads George, Lennie, and other ranchers like Candy and Crooks, to indulge in the dream of living "off the fatta the lan." George's elaborate description of the farm's abundant plants and animals also makes it seem like a symbol of paradise.

RABBITS

Lennie's dream is to tend the rabbits on the farm that he and George hope to one day own. This dream establishes Lennie's complete innocence. But Lennie loves the rabbits because of their soft fur, and his love of touching soft things leads to his doom. The rabbits, then, symbolize not only innocence, but also the downfall of innocence in a harsh world.

CANDY'S DOG

Candy's once powerful sheepdog is now old and useless. Carlson's killing of the dog makes it clear that during the Depression only the strong survive. The way in which Carlson kills the dog—with a gunshot to the back of the head—foreshadows Lennie's death and likens Lennie to Candy's dog: they're both powerless, innocent, and doomed.

LENNIE'S PUPPY

Just as Lennie is dependent on George, Lennie's puppy is entirely dependent on Lennie. Like Lennie, the puppy symbolizes the fate of the weak in the face of the strong.

PART 3 QUOTES

"Carl's right, Candy. That dog ain't no good to himself. I wisht somebody'd shoot me if I got old an' a cripple."

You seen what they done to my dog tonight? They says he wasn't no good to himself nor nobody else. When they can me here I wisht somebody'd shoot me. But they won't do nothing like that.

"We could live offa the fatta the lan!"

S'pose they was a carnival or a circus come to town, or a ball game, or any damn thing." Old Candy nodded in appreciation of the idea. "We'd just go to her." George said. "We wouldn't ask nobody if we could. Jus' say, 'We'll go to her,' an' we would. Jus' milk the cow and sling some grain to the chickens an' go to her

I ought to of shot that dog myself, George. I shouldn't ought to of let no stranger shoot my dog.

PART 4 QUOTES

I seen it over an' over-a guy talkin' to another guy and it don't make no difference if he don't hear or understand. The thing is, they're talkin', or they're settin' still not talkin'. It don't make no difference, no difference....It's just the talking.

A guy sets alone out here at night, maybe readin' books or thinkin' or stuff like that. Sometimes he gets thinkin', an' he got nothing to tell him what's so an' what ain't so. Maybe if he sees somethin', he don't know whether it's right or not. He can't turn to some other guy and ast him if he sees it too. He can't tell. He got nothing to measure by. I seen things out here. I wasn't drunk. I don't know if I was asleep. If some guy was with me, he could tell me I was asleep, an' then it would be all right. But I jus' don't know.

'A guy needs somebody-to be near him.' He whined, 'A guy goes nuts if he ain't got nobody.'

I seen hundreds of men come by on the road an' on the ranches, with their bindles on their back an' that same damn thing in their heads. . . every damn one of 'em's got a little piece of land in his head. An' never a God damn one of 'em ever gets it. Just like heaven. Ever'body wants a little piece of lan'. I read plenty of books out here. Nobody never gets to heaven, and nobody gets no land.

PART 5 QUOTES

Why can't I talk to you? I never get to talk to nobody. I get awful lonely.

QUOTES

PART 1 QUOTES

Slowly, like a terrier who doesn't want to bring a ball to its master, Lennie approached, drew back, approached again.

Well, we ain't got any,' George exploded. 'Whatever we ain't got, that's what you want. God a'mighty, if I was alone I could live so easy. I could go get a job an' work, an' no trouble....An' whatta I got,' George went on furiously. 'I got you! You can't keep a job and you lose me ever' job I get. Jus' keep me shovin' all over the country all the time. An' that ain't the worst. You get in trouble. You do bad things and I got to get you out.

Guys like us, that work on ranches, are the loneliest guys in the world. They got no family. They don't belong no place....With us it ain't like that. We got a future.... An' why? Because...because I got you to look after me, and you got me to look after you, and that's why.

"Well," said George, "we'll have a big vegetable patch and a rabbit hutch and chickens. And when it rains in the winter, we'll just say the hell with goin' to work, and we'll build up a fire in the stove and set around it an' listen to the rain comin' down on the roof."

PART 2

"Ain't many guys travel around together," he mused. "I don't know why. Maybe ever'body in the whole damn world is scared of each other."

He pawed up the hay until it partly covered her.

I think I knowed from the very first. I think I knowed we'd never do her. He usta like to hear about it so much I got to thinking maybe we would.

PART 6 QUOTES

A water snake glided smoothly up the pool, twisting its periscope head from side to side; and it swam the length of the pool and came to the legs of a motionless heron that stood in the shallows. A silent head and beak lanced down and plucked it out by the head, and the beak swallowed the little snake while its tail waved frantically.

No, Lennie. I ain't mad. I never been mad, an' I ain't now. That's a thing I want ya to know.

"Never you mind," said Slim. "A guy got to sometimes."

SUMMARY & ANALYSIS

PART 1

The novel begins with a detailed description of the lush rural area near the riverbed of the Salinas River a few miles south of Soledad, California. George Milton and Lennie Small, two men dressed in denim, are walking along a path on the riverbed. George, the leader, is small and quick. Lennie, huge and awkward, follows behind.

The men stop. Lennie drinks huge gulps from a pool of standing water next to the river. George warns him not to drink too much or else he'll get sick again.

When George complains about the bus driver who dropped them off too far from the ranch, Lennie asks where they're going. George reminds Lennie about their plans, but stops when he notices a dead mouse in Lennie's pocket. Lennie picked it up because he likes to pet its soft fur, but accidentally killed it.

George throws the mouse away, and tells Lennie they're going to a ranch like the one they just left in Weed. George also tells Lennie not to say anything when they meet the boss at the new ranch.

George and Lennie's denim clothing show that they're poor ranch hands. Their single-file walking pattern reveals the dynamics of their relationship: George is the leader even though Lennie is larger.

Lennie's lack of common sense is the first indication of his mental disability.

George clearly acts as a kind of parent to Lennie. Petting the mouse shows Lennie's innocence and the unintended consequences of his strength.

George constantly worries that Lennie's disability will jeopardize their welfare and their future.

Lennie remembers that they were "run out" of Weed, but George says they ran away before they could be run out. George then says that his life would be so much easier and more free if Lennie wasn't always following him.

George decides they should spend the night where they are. Lennie goes off to find firewood. While he's gone George thinks of him as a "poor bastard." When Lennie returns without wood, George suspects he's found the dead mouse again. George takes it, making Lennie cry. Lennie mentions how his Aunt Clara used to give him mice. George reminds Lennie that he always accidentally killed them.

The men have a dinner of canned beans. When Lennie complains about the lack of ketchup, George again says how much easier his life would be without Lennie. He brings up the event that got them run out of Weed: Lennie touched a woman's dress and refused to let go. She accused him of rape. Lennie liked the dress because it felt soft as a mouse's fur.

Lennie offers to leave George alone and go live in a cave. Lennie imagines that he could keep mice in his cave if he wanted to, without George's supervision.

George says he wants Lennie to stay with him. He comments that ranch workers are always lonely, but he and Lennie are different. They have each other.

At Lennie's urging, George describes their future. They'll save money until they can buy their own farm. George describes the farm right down to its rabbit hutches. Lennie can't contain his excitement about tending rabbits and living off the "fatta the lan."

As they go to sleep, George asks Lennie to take a close look at their surroundings. He tells Lennie that if he gets into any trouble at the ranch he should back to this spot and hide in the bushes.

PART 2

George and Lennie arrive at the ranch the next morning. At the bunkhouse, an old man with no right hand and a crippled dog greets them. His name is Candy. He says the boss was angry when they didn't show up last night.

Given that Lennie keeps getting them fired, George is right: his life would be easier without Lennie. So why does he stay with Lennie?

Behind George's scolding and frustration are pity and love. Lennie's history with mice shows that he often destroys the things he loves, foreshadowing his fate. Aunt Clara's death shows the lack of family and community in the ranch workers' lives.

George's bachelor fantasy shows how his feelings of responsibility for Lennie interrupted the plans he had as a youth. Lennie's obsession with soft things extends to women.

Lennie understands he's a burden. He also has his own desire for freedom.

Deep feelings of friendship and loyalty keep George with Lennie.

The farm is George and Lennie's American Dream. This dream of a future together is the fullest expression of their friendship.

Yet even at this hopeful moment, George senses that Lennie's mental disability will dash their hopes.

The bunkhouse is a place inhabited by single, lonely men. Candy is a man broken by life and the Depression, dependent on the kindness of the Boss.

The boss enters. George blames the bus driver for their lateness. When the boss asks about their skills, George speaks for Lennie. The boss gets suspicious when Lennie repeats something George says.

Lennie's mental weakness has already made him forget his promise not to speak, foreshadowing more trouble ahead.

The boss has never seen a man go out of his way for another man like George does for Lennie, and suspects that George might be taking advantage of Lennie. George lies, and says that Lennie is his cousin. The boss is still suspicious, but lets them stay.

The boss can't fathom that two men could care for one another. The idea of lasting male friendship is foreign on a ranch where survival is the rule.

After the boss leaves, Lennie asks George if what he said was true. George says they were just lies, and notices that Candy has been listening to their conversation. He tells Candy to mind his own business. Candy assures him he wasn't eavesdropping.

Lennie can't remember his own past. George's feelings of friendship don't extend beyond Lennie. To other men, he tries to project strength.

Curley, the boss's son, enters, looking for his father. Curley, who wears fancy boots, quickly starts picking on Lennie, who refuses to speak. After Curley leaves, Candy says Curley is a lightweight boxer and has a history of picking fights with men larger than him.

Curley is careful to mark himself as richer than other men (through his boots) or stronger (by picking fights with larger men).

Candy adds that Curley has only gotten worse since his recent marriage to a pretty "tart" who flirts with the ranch hands. Candy also reveals that Curley keeps vaseline in his left glove to keep his fingers soft.

The mention of Curley's wife shows the men's fear of women and their effects on men.

When Candy leaves, George tells Lennie to stay away from Curley. Fighting with Curley, he warns, will get them fired. Lennie promises. George again tells Lennie to hide and wait for George in the bushes by the river if he ever gets into trouble at the ranch.

George continues to look out for Lennie, and senses that Curley's macho posturing will wind up a threat to them.

Just then, Curley's wife enters. She is very pretty and wears a lot of makeup. While asking where Curly is, she moves to ensure that she shows off her body.

Curley's wife enjoys threatening the men with her good looks.

Slim tells her that Curley is back at the main house. When she's gone, Lennie calls her "purty." George warns him to stay away from her. Lennie, frightened, begs to leave the ranch. George says first they have to make enough money to buy their own land.

George foresees that Lennie's attraction to feminine softness will again cause trouble, and threaten their dream of a farm.

Slim is a leader and authority among the other ranch hands. After talking to George and Lennie and seeing their friendship, Slim is impressed. He says it's rare to see two men travel together because most people are scared of each other. George agrees that it's better to travel with a friend.

Slim's admiration for George and Lennie's friendship shows how extraordinary that friendship is. It also shows Slim's ability to see beyond the harshness of ranch life.

Carlson, another ranch hand, introduces himself to George and Lennie, then asks Slim about his dog. Slim says she gave birth to nine puppies, but that he had to drown four because there wasn't enough food for them all. Carlson proposes shooting Candy's crippled dog and replacing it with one of the puppies. Lennie wonders if he can get a puppy of his own.

On the ranch during the Depression, the men believe killing the weak protects the weak from prolonged suffering. While killing is therefore seen as mercy, it also means that if you want to live it's crucial that you seem strong.

Curley enters again, looking for his wife. When he leaves, George says he might end up in a fight with Curley himself. The triangle rings, signalling that it's time for dinner.

Curley's wariness about his wife makes George uneasy: he foresees trouble.

PART 3

Slim agrees to give Lennie a puppy. When George thanks him, Slim says Lennie is the best worker he's ever seen even though he's "cuckoo." George defends Lennie, and Slim again admires George and Lennie's friendship.

George's pride when Slim praises Lennie's work and his defense of Lennie when Slim calls him "cuckoo" conveys George's heartfelt affection for Lennie.

George explains that he grew up with Lennie and took care of him after his Aunt Clara died. George admits that at first he took advantage of Lennie's willingness to do whatever he told him, but soon felt ashamed and since then has taken good care of him. He adds that having Lennie as his companion keeps him from getting "mean," as most ranch workers do.

George describes his own moral development. George once took advantage of Lennie, as all the men on the ranch take advantage of each other. But his friendship with Lennie taught him to avoid such "meanness."

George also tells Slim what happened in Weed. Lennie touched a woman's dress. She objected. He panicked and wouldn't let go. The woman claimed it was rape, and Lennie and George had to flee a mob.

Lennie and George's earlier trouble stems from Lennie's innocent love of soft things and a woman's false accusal of rape.

Lennie enters with his puppy under his coat. George orders him to return the puppy to its litter. While Lennie is gone, Candy and his crippled dog enter the bunkhouse, followed by Carlson. Carlson again suggests they put the dog out of its misery. Slim agrees and offers Candy one of his puppies.

Slim and Carlson can't imagine that Candy has an emotional attachment to his dog, so they can't comprehend that killing the dog would pain him.

Whit enters, holding a magazine containing a letter to the editor from a ranch hand they once knew. Meanwhile, Carlson persuades Candy to let him shoot the dog. He takes the dog outside. As the men play cards, a shot fires. Candy stares at the wall.

The "mercy" killing of Candy's dog shows how the strong destroy the weak on the ranch. The killing also foreshadows future events.

Crooks, the black stable manager enters with news for Slim. Slim leaves with Crooks, and the men discuss Curley's wife. They agree with George that women don't belong on ranches, and that she'll end up causing trouble. Whit invites George to come to a brothel with him the next night. George declines, saying he and Lennie are trying to save money.

George again predicts that Curley's wife will cause trouble. He views all women as temptresses. And he implies that women might interfere with his dream of buying a farm with Lennie.

Lennie and Carlson enter the bunkhouse. Curley enters soon after, again looking for his wife. He suspects she's with Slim in the barn and storms out. The other men follow, hoping for a fight.

Curley's wife is a threat even to Curley. He thinks she'll humiliate him by cheating on him.

George and Lennie stay behind, and soon begin talking about their farm. Having overheard George's description of the farm as a place where they can just "belong," Candy offers his life savings of $350 to help them buy it. Though George is at first suspicious, soon the three men are making plans.

In losing his dog, Candy lost his community. He's now attracted to George and Lennie's idea of a farm as a new community. He'll give everything he has for fellowship.

As the other men return, George warns Lennie and Candy to keep the farm a secret. Candy whispers back that he should have shot his dog himself.

George will later heed Candy's advice.

Slim, Curley, Carlson, and Whit enter. Curley apologizes to Slim for suspecting him, and all the men mock Curley for being so insecure. Curley thinks Lennie is also laughing at him, though Lennie was just smiling while thinking of tending rabbits on the farm. Curley starts punching Lennie, bloodying his face. Lennie only fights back when George tells him he may. He then easily breaks Curley's hand.

Curley's insecurity about his wife leads him to mistake Lennie's heartfelt smile for a taunt, and to try to save face by showing he's stronger than Lennie. This suggests that Lennie and George's dream will lead unintentionally to trouble.

Curley wants to fire George and Lennie, but Slim tells him if he does not one on the ranch will respect him. Curley gives in. Lennie asks George if he can still tend the rabbits on their farm. George says yes.

This moment may be the most hopeful in the novel. The men have rallied around George and Lennie. Their dream seems achievable.

PART 4

Crooks, whose nickname stems from his crooked back, sits on his bunk in the stable. Lennie stops by Crooks' room, but Crooks demands he leave. Crooks shouts that if he's not allowed in the white men's quarters, then the white men aren't allowed in his. But Lennie's innocent loneliness (all the other men have gone into town to visit a brothel) wins Crooks over.

Crooks's race makes him even more trapped and alone than the other men. Crooks and Lennie are outcasts. Each is "weak." Each has suffered the unfair consequences of a "disability": retardation and race.

As they talk, Lennie forgets the farm is a secret and mentions it. Crooks thinks this just one of Lennie's fantasies.

Crooks has suffered too much to believe in dreams.

Crooks describes his childhood in California. As a black man he was always lonely. Even on the ranch he's forced to sleep apart from the other men.

All ranchers are lonely men. Crooks's skin color makes him even lonelier.

Suddenly angry and bitter, Crooks tells Lennie that George might not return to the ranch. In terrible fear, Lennie nearly attacks Crooks.

Crooks makes himself feel strong by making Lennie feel weaker.

Crooks says he was just trying to make Lennie understand what it's like to be black and, therefore, alone. "A guy needs somebody," Crooks says.

Crooks's fear is a reminder of how physically powerful Lennie is.

The conversation turns back to the farm. Crooks says all ranch hands dream about owning land, but nobody ever does, just like nobody ever gets to heaven.

Crooks, who's experienced so much suffering, sees all dreams as shams.

Candy wanders in. When Crooks again says they'll never own a farm, Candy replies that they have a spot of land picked out and nearly all the money they need. Crooks wonders if he might be able to go with them.

Crooks's sudden interest in the plan shows how powerful the dream can be to hope-starved ranchers.

Curley's wife walks in and starts mocking the men in the room as the "weak ones" not allowed to go to the brothel.

Now Curley's wife asserts her power by making the men feel weak

Despite the men's demands that she leave, Curley's wife starts talking about how sad she is. She claims she could have been a movie actress, but instead is so lonely she's in the bunkhouse talking to a bunch of losers. She asks what happened to Curley's hand, and gets angry when they deny he hurt it in a fight.

Curley's wife reveals her own failed dreams. Despite the fact that the men hate Curley, they cover for him, siding with men against women.

Candy tells her to leave. If she fires them, he says, they'll just buy their own farm. Curley's wife laughs at him. Crooks also demands she leave, but quiets when she curses him and threatens to have him lynched. Candy finally says he hears the men returning. Curley's wife leaves. On the way out, she thanks Lennie for beating up her husband.

Immediately after showing weakness, Curley's wife asserts dominance over all of the men. In doing so, she crushes their dream. She makes it clear that there's no room for such a dream in the reality of the ranch or the Depression.

The other men return. When George discovers Lennie was talking about the farm, he gets angry. But Crooks says Curley's wife was right, and that he's no longer interested in going to their farm.

Crooks's sudden claim that he doesn't want anything to do with the farm confirms the crushing impact of Curley's wife's verbal assault.

PART 5

On Sunday, Lennie sits in the barn stroking his puppy, which is dead. He fears this means he won't be allowed to tend the rabbits. He throws the puppy away, then retrieves it and starts stroking it again.

The dead puppy is an ominous sign. Once again, Lennie's innocent strength has created accidental tragedy.

Curley's wife enters. Lennie tells her he's not allowed to talk to her, but she says no one will ever know. She notices the dead puppy and consoles him, then explains that she almost became a movie actress, but her plans were thwarted by her mother and a bad talent agent. She says she doesn't even like Curley.

Like the men on the ranch, Curley's wife also suffers from lack of love and attention, and also from having sacrificed her plans and dreams for Curley.

Lennie starts talking about the farm and rabbits, and explains that he likes to pet soft things. She says her hair is soft. He strokes it excitedly, messing it up. Curley's wife gets upset and tells him to let go. Lennie panics and shakes her head, breaking her neck.

A moment of connection between Lennie and Curley's wife ends in tragedy. Just as he killed his puppy, Lennie kills her, and his dream.

Aware that he's done "another bad thing," Lennie sneaks out of the bunkhouse.

Lennie is referring to the events in Weed.

Candy enters and finds Curley's wife's body. He runs and gets George, and the two of them realize that Curley will lynch Lennie. Candy then asks if the plan to buy the farm is now officially off. George says he never really thought it would happen, but Lennie believed in it so much he had started to as well.

Lennie stopped George from growing "mean" because his belief in their dream made George believe it too. Now George is doomed to live a lonely rancher's life.

Fearing Curley will think he had something to do with the murder, George tells Candy to pretend George never saw the body. George leaves. Candy curses at Curley's wife's body. He cries, then goes to alert the men.

Candy cries for the death of the dream that had saved him, for a while, from hopelessness. George, meanwhile, protects himself.

Slim, Whit, Carlson, Curley, Crooks, and George enter the barn. Curley demands that Lennie be killed. Carlson says his gun is missing and guesses Lennie stole it. Slim tells George that Lennie has to be killed. George, who knows where Lennie is hiding, sends the lynch mob in the wrong direction.

Curley's first emotional response to his wife's death is not sorrow, but anger. Note the parallel: earlier it was Carlson's gun that killed Candy's dog, and Slim who agreed the dog had to die.

PART 6

Hiding in the brush by the river, Lennie has a vision of his Aunt Clara, who tells him George would have had a much easier life without him. Lennie then has a hallucination of a giant rabbit, which tells him George will abandon him.

Lennie understands the destructive consequences of his actions on his friendship and dream. The things he holds most dear condemn him.

George shows up. He is quiet and not angry. Lennie begs George to yell at him. George does, but he shows no real anger. Lennie offers to go live in a cave, and George, as usual, tells him not to.

In this terrible moment, Lennie wants to act as if everything is normal. George plays along.

Lennie then asks George to describe their farm. George does, and tells Lennie to take off his hat and to look out over the river and try to imagine the farm. As Lennie happily says they should buy the farm now, George lifts Carlson's gun and shoots Lennie in the back of the head.

George takes Candy's advice: he makes sure Lennie dies at the hand of someone he loves while imagining the unattainable dream that made his life meaningful.

The other men hear the gun shot. George tells Carlson that Lennie had his gun and that he shot him after wrestling it away from him. Slim leads the distraught George away, repeating over and over that George had to do it. Carlson and Curley can't figure out what's "eatin'" George and Slim.

Men like Carlson and Curley have no understanding of the friendship that can exist between men. Slim and George do, because of Lennie. That is the legacy of Lennie's dream.

